LEGISLATURE OF MARYLAND. HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

> Friday, February 5, 1830. MR. TEACKLE'S SPEECH.

(Concluded.) 3 That the power to "make issue and negotiate 3 That the power to "make issue and negotiate promissory notes," is inverly formal, and that the proposed emission being founded upon an assigned auditatinal capital, could not impinge the organic law of the Peleral Government, which designs to prohibit the making of bills of credit a tender in payment of debts, not although the notes of the Commonwealths Bank of Kentucky, and those of the Bank of the State of Pennessee, were, in effect, of that description, the right to emit them has not been questioned in any of the courts of the United States.

4. And as this power has been conceded, in actual practice, the deduction drawn from the supposition that the resources of the bank would be confined nearby to its capital paid in, is entirely groundless and in-admissible, and by the exhibits of the Bank of the State of Albama, where the specie funds exceed the gress amount of capital, and their circulation are greater far than either of them, and the operations of the public Banks of other States. I am furtified in be-

Mr Teackle proceeded to state his ardent concurrence with the views of the enlightened President on the subject of improvements, and avowed his conviction, which had been of long standing, that the best expedient would be found in the practical use of an inconvertible currency, and that this opinion was illustrated with peculiar force and perspicuity by the local report of the President and Directors of the Book of the State of South Carolina, to the Legislature of that State; and that he also concurred in excibing the flourishing condition of Philadelphia to the cause which the President had assigned it, as from the reflections of many sears upon the mysteries of circulation and that he assessment. ture of that State; and that he also concurred in serching the flourishing condition of Philadelphia to the cause which the President had assigned it, as from the reflections of many years upon the mysteries of circulation, and their influence upon communities, he had been satisfied that effective money was as essential to restore the energies of a paralyzed population as is the food of plants to renovate the latent principle of exhaust d land; but to be effective, the circulation must be examined to the interchanges of society, and in constant increase with the progressive wealth of that society—it has been splly styled the voil of industry, as, like Winan's Cr., treduces friction and multiplies productive labour indefinitely. And Mr. T. further said, that he had repudiated the idea of convertibility as communicating an equivalent to facilities, of any denomination, or as imparting intrinsic value, neither could he allow that intrinsic value was indispensable to money—that representing and being bottomed on value was all sufficient, that intrinsic value, neither could he allow that intrinsic value was indispensable to money—that representing and being bottomed on value was all sufficient, that intrinsic value injured money, in its proper character as such, insomuch as it tended to restrain its circulation and person tis employment in useful work, while incontentible money is never hosafied. He stated that the paper of the Commonwealths Bank of Kentucky hab been reduced for a time below the value of convertible poper, by reason of the excessive indulgence of his recipient, that the depression in the exchangeable value of their property, was the handle of the property, was the handle of the property of the country of the property of the country of

Mr. Teackle again adverted to the Bank of the braic of Alabama, and contrasted the statement of its affairs with those of the Banks of this State, as reported to the Legislature by the Treasurer of the Western Shore, in which it appears that their "notes in circulation" amount to but a little more than a fifth part of their capital and that their three is "in only one tenth Jation' amount to but a little more than a fifth part of their capital, and that their "specie" is only one tenth of the aggregate of their "loans and discounts, (b) and in vindication of the principle in controversy, and to prove the superior credit of public Banks over any private incorporation, he submitted an official exposition of the Bank of the State of Alabama, in which it appears, that—appears, that—

"The institution is founded entirely on State capital, to the exclusion of individual stockholders. Its loans are distributed among the counties according to their population. Its operations have been successful, as its gains, in five years, have been $198,343 45, although it commenced with only about $200,000, and hy surplus profits, and incidental revenue, its capital has increased from year to year, until it amounts to fipwards of $50,000.
